“This book captures Raymond’s energy, insights and experience from a lifetime of guiding people to success in school, careers and life and makes them available to students in high schools and colleges everywhere.”

Tobin Quereau, Professor of Human Development and Assistant Chair for Behavioral Sciences

Austin Community College

“I found this book to be very easy to read and understand. I have learning disabilities and sometimes have difficulty reading and understanding what I read. But this book was an exception to that. It was a great book. Professor Gerson gave good tips. I found it to be encouraging and positive. I would recommend this class to any incoming freshmen.” Sam Leeper, Student

“I like this book because it’s a starting point for my success. It is sort of like a manual on how to be great. You may fail, but it tells you how to get back up and succeed.” Mathew Castillo, Student

“I learned how to be more responsible, how to overcome hard times, and to forgive myself and others for past mistakes. I know one day I will make a difference in someone’s life. This course and book helped me to find out more about myself and to think better about myself. Honestly, I’m a whole new person inside and out.” Alexandra Martinez, Student
